- 1 Foster a love of books and reading in your home. Even babies enjoy looking at pictures and hearing books read aloud. Research shows that children who are read to regularly learn to associate reading with pleasure.
- 2 Let children see and hear the Bible frequently. Pull up an audio Bible on YouVersion or BibleGateway.com and listen to a chapter while children play nearby. Let your children see you reading your Bible.
- 3 Build an at-home library of Christian children's books. Find an age-appropriate Bible storybook. Add a devotional and a few seasonal or holiday books. Elementary kids may enjoy reference books, biographies, and comic-style Bible stories too. Check used bookstores for books other families have outgrown.
- 4 Make Bible time part of your regular routine, whether at breakfast, bedtime, or special family time midweek or on weekends. Use a Bible translation children can understand, like the ICB or NIV. Let children participate by reading, praying, or singing.
- 5 Talk about God and His Word throughout your day. Nature, family situations, and helping others provide plenty of opportunities. Be open to questions, and search out the answers together. A site like GotQuestions.org can help.
- 6 Mix it up. Use a devotional guide, act out Bible stories, make up songs or poems, or draw or make crafts for variety and fun. Play children's music based on Scripture in the car.
- 7 When it's time for a full-text Bible, give children a Bible they can read and understand. Look for an engaging cover, uncluttered page design, and special features like background information and short devotional thoughts.
- 8 Help children establish personal time with God as they mature. Let them know this is what you do as well—they love to copy you!
- 9 Engage hearts as well as minds. As we get to know God better, we love Him more. Let the Bible help children discover who God is, what He does, and how He cares for us.
- 10 Pray. God's Word will always accomplish His purposes (Isaiah 55:10-11)!
